

Foster Parent College: Self-Harm

Understandably, foster and adoptive parents may feel disturbed when a child engages in self-harm by carving on or recklessly injuring the body, pulling out their hair, engaging in risky behavior, or threatening suicide.

In Self-Harm, five families whose children obsess about and participate in these types of self-harm discuss their concerns with Dr. Richard Delaney, author, speaker and practicing psychologist. Delaney explores the reasons behind the behaviors and shares strategies with parents to help them more effectively deal with their children who self-harm.
